Around the Arlanza

By César Navarro

The Yecla Gorge

To the southeast of the province of Burgos, in the Iberian mountain range. "El cauce" stream, affluent of Matalasviejas river, has drawn a narrow and deep gorge in the Cervera cliff through the ages. It is known as "La Yecla" the small stream has craved the limestone materials of Cretacic, shaping sharp escarpments with a great variety of karstic forms. The defile, which in some places doesn't reach two metres wide, is crossed with handrails alongside. In winter, the ice makes the passage difficult because its narrowness doesn't let the rays of sunlight in.

These lands where inhabited by the man from the very beginning because a prehistoric site has been found in the high zones of the defile and there is cave art in the cave of "San García". To the north of "La Yecla", there is another defile from "Santo Domingo de Silos" to the Hura valley, which is shaped by Matalaviejas River. This river rises at the foot of Carazo cliff. All through the history, these natural areas lodged people as different as Celts or Romans later, Christians and Moslems fought there.

MONTEJO (SEGOVIA) A LA PLUS GRANDE COLONIE DE RAPACES D'EUROPE

Le recensement réalisé dans les dernières semaines confirme que Montejo a la plus grande réserve naturelle de rapaces de l'Europe. Il y a plus de deux cents petits, dont la plupart sont des vautours, sur les rochers.

D'après le responsable du recensement, le docteur José Fidel

Fernández, nous sommes face à la plus grande concentration de vautours, même en Afrique il n'y a rien de semblable. Seulement en Asie Centrale, dans d'immenses régions on pourrait trouver quelque chose de comparable.
